How to Lower Your Monthly Payments through Income-driven Student Loan Repayment Plans

Income-driven repayment plans set your monthly student loan payment at an amount that is based on your income. One type of income-driven repayment plan is an income-contingent repayment (ICR) plan, which allows you to repay your student loans based on a percentage of your income. This type of repayment plan allows student loan borrowers to make monthly payments that are tailored to fit the amount of their take-home pay, with any remaining balance cancelled after a set number of years of repayment

How to Determine Your Payments

To determine the current actual balance of your student loan(s), please contact your lender(s) or servicer(s):

For federal student loans visit FSA ID | Your Account for Federal Student Aid to find out which company is the servicer of your federal student loans. To learn more about Loan Servicers, visit <https://studentaid.gov/manage-loans/repayment/servicers>

For private loan lenders that were certified by [_____] visit the following websites:

To estimate your monthly payment amounts for the loans summarized above:

Federal Loans – Your estimated monthly payments depend on your repayment plan. Calculate your student loan payments using the federal Loan Repayment Simulator. You can also review pages 21-23 of the Direct Loan Exit Counseling Guide \(studentaid.gov\) for additional information.

Private Loans –

1. Refer to the repayment tables on pages 28-37 of New Jersey's Student_Loan_Guide.pdf \(hesaa.org\)
2. Use student loan repayment calculators: There are many free, publicly available student loan repayment calculators online that you can use. Here are a few suggestions, though this is by no means an exhaustive list:
